

Qualifications which require delay to assessment as a result of Covid-19

In most situations, our qualifications can continue to be delivered online and many assessment elements can be carried out by learners at home. However, some practical assessments cannot be conducted because to do so would breach government guidance on social distancing and restrictions on gatherings of people.

Wherever possible we have identified adaptations to practical assessments but there are cases where the adaptations required would undermine the purpose of the assessment; the learner would not be able to demonstrate the required skills and their achievement would not be sufficiently comparable with the learners who have achieved the qualifications without such adaptations.

Additional notes on delayed assessments:

- There may be some educational or work settings where conduct of the assessment in the usual way is possible. Please consider the measures taken in your own setting to limit the spread of Covid-19 in conjunction with government guidance when planning and carrying out practical assessment. It would be advisable to carry out appropriate risk assessment.
- Guidance on social distancing, travel and gatherings of people varies across the nations of the UK, and outside the UK the situation may be very different, so you are advised to act in accordance with the situation in your geographical location.
