

Qualifications which do not require adaptation as a result of Covid-19

For some of our qualifications, the assessment is principally knowledge-based and assessed through completion of a learner assessment record (LAR) or other form of portfolio. These qualifications can continue to be delivered and assessed either remotely or in, some cases, within educational settings which learners are able to access.

There may be some instances where an activity provided in the LAR will require some adaptation which you should discuss as a teaching, assessment and internal quality assurance team to decide what is appropriate for your context and learners. For example, a learner presentation to their peers face-to-face may not be possible but this could be conducted using a video conferencing platform. Wherever adaptations of this type are made the following should be kept in mind:

- does the assessment enable the learner to sufficiently demonstrate achievement of the assessment criterion the task is testing?
- what additional guidance is needed to help prepare the learner for this adapted assessment?
